THE EAST EUROPEAN MARKET FOR ELECTRICITY TARIFF METERS 1999

Publication: July 1999

The countries of Eastern Europe are experiencing a period of great change, not least in their electric power sectors. Many governments are embarking on programmes of deregulation and privatisation in their electricity supply industries, meaning increased competition and opportunities for foreign investment. Besides encouraging utilities to be more competitive, this reform is also targeted at increasing power supply to meet growing demand.

The issue of electricity tariff metering lies at the heart of this transformation, since utility companies face the possibility of supplying electricity to homes and businesses far from their traditional service regions in the new competitive market, and the meter suppliers are striving to provide the most advanced levels of metering technology.

Continuing Goulden Reports' excellent tradition for conducting in-depth studies into the industries of electricity and electrical equipment comes this latest series of reports which investigate the Eastern European Markets for Electricity Tariff Meters. In six extensive country studies, Goulden Reports comprehensively examines the electricity tariff meter market, with each report broken down into the following format :

- A brief economic overview, with particular regard to new construction and housing.
- The national electricity system, with regard to power generation, distribution and supply, deregulation, privatisation and electricity tariffs
- The national meter park, with regard to meter installations, certification, ownership and costs of reading.
- Chapters on Electromagnetic, Electronic, Remote, Prepayment and Shared metering.
- Load management and tariff switching
- The national supply structure, with regard to the major manufacturers of electricity tariff meters and purchasing and specification procedures.
- A directory of relevant distribution and supply companies and electricity tariff meter manufacturers.
